residents in the area of the site. Church groups and individuals complained of noise and dust, asking for money to pay for car washes or to have their windows washed. CHRISTOPHER considered these people to be street hustlers looking for cash.

CHRISTOPHER was summoned to a meeting with HENRY HENDERSON, Environmental Commissioner for the City of Chicago. At the recommendation of LAURA SELBY, secretary for JIM WELLS at COSMOPOLITAN BANK, CHRISTOPHER retained JIM GRAINEY of SCHAEFFER, SCHONN and BIRNEY, to represent him. In the meeting with HENDERSON, CHRISTOPHER explained the concept behind his site. HENDERSON advised that he liked the idea and identified an additional possible site for CHRISTOPHER to use.

CHRISTOPHER was also contacted by JOHNNY DOBBS who said that he was representing a church group. DOBBS said that for $15,000 he would leave CHRISTOPHER and his operation alone. CHRISTOPHER consulted with HENRY who advised him not to pay DOBBS.

HENDERSON later stopped the lot beautification program and the dirt began to pile up on the site. HENRY told CHRISTOPHER to continue to bring dirt in while he worked with HENDERSON. At the same time HENRY came under federal investigation for corruption. CHRISTOPHER advised that he stopped paying HENRY because of fear of the investigation. As a result of the investigation and the cessation of payments to HENRY, HENRY did not win any concession from HENDERSON. In the interim the site was built into a small mountain and HENRY was defeated by JESSE MILLER.

CHRISTOPHER last paid HENRY $3,000 when HENRY asked for money to help pay his legal fees. Each payment to HENRY was made in private and he is aware of no witnesses to the payments.

CHRISTOPHER recalled that he paid bribes to between eight and 12 city inspectors while operating the site. The only inspectors that CHRISTOPHER could specifically recall were ANDREW MALDEN and DAVID TELLEZ. CHRISTOPHER recalled that he paid MALDEN a couple of thousand dollars and TELLEZ a total of $20 to $50. CHRISTOPHER advised that he would be visited at the site by city officials and would give them cash, generally between $10 and $100, to get rid of them.

Further, CHRISTOPHER recalled that HENRY's regular bagman was MICHAEL CHANDLER. In an initial meeting with HENRY,
